PUBLIC MEETING AT LIVERPOOL.

Town Hall, Liverpool, to consider the best means of obtaining an abundant and permanent water supply for domestic and manufacturing purposes, to arrange for united action in the matter of town drainage, and to urge the necessity for a bridge being constructed over George's River. The meeting was largely attended, his Worship the Mayor, Mr. Edward A. Sheriff, occupying the chair.

Mr. J. W. Bax, in moving the meeting, read the requisition which had been presented to him desiring that he should convene the meeting, and called on Father Barry, D.S.B., to secure the first replication.

Father BARNY moved, - That, in the opinion of this meeting, it is necessary to take steps to secure to Liverpool and its neighbourhood a supply of water, and manufacturing purposes. In doing so, he stated that he had only been 12 months among the people of the district, and that he was not acquainted with the water supply of the township only 20 miles distant from the capital city of New South Wales - had been that it was in every shape and form a long way behind what it ought to be. He then walked through the township he had noticed the absence of street lights, and the footpaths were everywhere in a state of neglect. He said that everything in the way of such convenience as was associated with civilization was as far behind what it should be as the people of the township were behind the people of the capital. He travelled through the whole of South Australia and Victoria, and on looking through his diary and contrasting the people of the township he had seen at Liverpool with those he had seen elsewhere he was enabled to say that the people of the township were the lowest and most degraded in the whole of the colony.

"Where only was seen
A lava on the common,
A grouse on the green, (Laughter.) The resolution he proposed was one of very great importance. They had flowing close to their town an abundant supply of water, but it was not fit to drink, and but did them, as he ought to do, it would find that the expense incurred in securing to them, with such a facility as he had mentioned, an abundant supply of water would be more than compensated by the increase to the great increase in comfort and advantage it would bring to the inhabitants of Liverpool. At present they had no means of procuring water except by drawing it up from the sea on the precarious supply of the river and the rain water they carried in their tanks. Before the last drought he had up the river and suggested that the water should be brought to the town by a pipe, and that the water was so dirty and almost undrinkable, was seen to be the only resource on which they could fall back for household wants and drinking purposes."

ample supply of water what with the numerous of Liverpool to Sydney, and with the special natural facilities of the locality, he had no doubt that the town would greatly increase in number, and Liverpool would become an extremely flourishing township. The wharf state in the roads had also attracted his attention. They were in keeping with the township. Throughout the whole of Victoria the roads were exceptionally fine. One might travel from Melbourne to Geelong, thence to Colac, thence on to the western district, and he would find almost without exception roads upon which an angel might tread.

He would be no longer content to have their towns a desolation. He would show, that he was not a man, who would be content to raise a storm, and then leave it to blow itself out. He would show, that he was not a man, who would be content to raise a storm, and then leave it to blow itself out. happy hollow; but time was gradually waking up, and they were different to what they were some years ago. The old people were not so numerous, and he felt sure that in a few years to come they would be fewer still. of the river, and the district was known as a place useless for cultivation. Of course the great thing was to know how to construct the reservoir properly, and they should apply to the Government for assistance. But there were some feasible plan for obtaining a sufficient water supply. Of late years the river had silted up behind the dam, so that if they had not continued to we water the fields, they would have been dry. The continuous flow of the river, Surin, there were several other means, such as floodgates or other structures, which would prevent this kind the case, and what they wanted was a professional survey to find out the cause of the trouble. The river was very aptitude due to urge this matter. The whole of the upper part of the river was peculiarly adapted to the purpose of manmifera, and in a short time it would be a great source of income. The Government was re-creating it hoped the trustees would encourage the people to come to the district; but unless there was a good river supply they could hardly expect people to settle down in the market, the inhabitants of Liverpool said let people see that the town would there was almost a certainty that they would not be subject to the same inconveniences as Liverpool had experienced. The Government has never limited expenditure would secure an ample supply, and if they could do it at the other bank of the river could be so loaded with a certainty of plenty water; and if this could be done the town would be built along the bank. The town would then soon be a manufacturing centre of population, and employment would be secured. (Applause.)

Alderman WILLIAM SMITH moved the second resolution, "That the opinion of the Council was now given by the Council, and that the Council adopted some steps to disperse of the town drainage." It was explained that something was required to be done with the drainage of the town, and official notice was given from the Government from sundry members of the Council, who were present, that the Government was a skilled officer. Adam Smith, in his "Wealth of Nations,"

And that labour was the source of all wealth; hence the greater the labour, the greater the wealth. Nature had favoured them with regard to their position, so far as regarded riverbanks and the facilities which were offered for the establishment of manufactures in their midst; and if they were not unanimous in their action, and not as in the past divided, he believed they would be able to attain their object, and lay the foundation of the future prosperity of Liverpool by offering greater advantages to the people, and to the country, than any other place. He believed that the island should have a greater population, and he believed the time had now come when, if they only used energy, and were united in their action, they would achieve their object. They wanted their town to progress, and not longer to remain in the background. Progress was now-a-days written on science, on manufacture, indeed on everything, and they thought that the world, the world, the world, was coming (Applause).

ALDERMAN THOS. ARNOLD seconded the motion. The subject had been agitated for a long time, and he heartily re-echoed the remarks upon it by Alderman Smith.

THE HON. A. L. WILLIAMS, M.A., moved the third resolution—

"That it be the opinion of this meeting that it is no use a bridge should be built across George's River." The question was put for the vote on the bridge. The Alderman said, "I am not in a hurry, and on this point he was not prepared to say anything; but as to the necessity for a bridge, he thought it was most willing to speak. It could, indeed, hardly be said any one who had had to cross the dam did other than what he did for a bridge. Still, he did not desire the bridge more than what he desired for personal motive, but because he believed it would be a convenient and a useful convenience, and a bridge could certainly be made for the purpose. He mentioned that he had seen one of the parishioners who now was solely dependent on the amount of rain that fell whether he could cross the river to get his produce, chiefly fruit, to the market. This was a disadvantage, especially because there was no bridge across the river across the river. Children, too, were kept from attending school day after day because the planks spanning the river were perhaps broken and they were swept away and they could not get to school. He mentioned that he had seen the little one cross. If there were a bridge, there would be no longer be this difficulty. The bridge should be a convenient one, such as would thoroughly establish communication between both shores, so that any one living at either shore would no longer be this difficulty.

miles of the metropolis, in the district, which in natural advantages held a foremost place in the colony.
 The children were not aware of losing their lives, simply for the want of a bridge
 There were about 20 children, from three or four years of age up to 12 years of age, who, in order to attend school, had to cross the river from Holdsworth to Liverpool; and to show the necessity of a bridge, the following incident is related, he stated that on last Sunday fortnight within three hours time, during a storm, the water rose so high that it was impossible to cross it. The children had often to cross when the water flowing rapidly rushed almost to the plank on which they had to tread, and they were obliged to hold on with both hands, every from school. There was no rail or chain across to hold on by as they crossed, but they had to step across the plank, unaided at times, when the rush of water beneath was enough to make the strongest-minded person tremble, ("Heer. heer." and "So it is.")

THE MARINE BOARD AND THE AUSTRAL INQUIRY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—We shall probably soon know, if we do not know, how it was that the Board of Trade in London managed, through the Colonial Office and the Governor, to put upon our local Marine Board sufficient pressure to stifle the legitimate inquiry into the foundering of the Austral which our Board had instituted.

In the interests of the builders of the Austral, or, other words, in the interests of those who are responsible for the double-bottom and water-ballast principles of construction, the Imperial authorities have, in so many words, told our Marine Board, that they, for their part, care nothing about our inquiry, so far as it might affect the certificates of master, mate, or engineer of this "ship of the age." What concerned them to know was, not whether the captain or officers were incompetent to perform their respective duties or had been guilty of any misconduct, but whether a double-bottom and water-ballast principle had been duly credited by the telegram which announced that the Austral

Under these circumstances, any one who understands the influence of public opinion on the Board of Trade, or the persons who drafted that the Austral inquiry, if conducted on a Sydney marine board, might end in a miscarriage of scientific justice.

The builders were not satisfied that their latest exposure of scientific principles should be at the mercy of a board Sydney ship-owners and ex ship captains in a case, which in respect of the mere statical equilibrium of the ship would probably be a test case, and might turn out very prejudicial to their interests.

The result is that the interests of science, and especially

This series of promptings means that our Marine Board is by the surrender of its jurisdiction to hold the inquiry, and in what Bacon would have called a "preservative instance" of the complex mathematical problems involved in the Austral's centre of gravity, have been made paramount to the law; and we have the spectacle of a competent tribunal calmly surrendering its unquestionable jurisdiction at the request of the Board of Trade, which, under the promptings of "science," prompted the Colonial Office to prompt the Governor to prompt the Marine Board to desist from the rash and unscientific undertaking which it has entered upon.

commends a grave and a handsome man, and a man of the highest Trade, by the supervision of the operations of the local in-bunal, his conduct a great act of usurpation.

A Yorker—General says:—"We can hardly go so far as say that the Marine Board was guilty of any neglect of its in abandoning the inquiry, because it is really a subordinate Court, and the instructions that came through the Government to abstain from inquiry was tantamount to an order from superior Court." This apology for the complacency of the Marine Board would have some cogency if it had its countenance of law; but it has not any such authority.
It is perfectly clear that the Board of Trade could only direct an inquiry to be held before a wreck commission in the circumstances of the foundering of the Austral when some competent witness of the casualty should have arrived at England. But the Board of Trade does not wait for the arrival of any such witness. It takes time by the forelock, anticipating the legal condition precedent, and under its impetuous promptings of "disinterested science," still the inquiry that had just been initiated on the spot where the casualty happened, and where the witnesses all were.

Not having any authority at the time of telegraphing this extraordinary disposal of the inquiry into the case itself, under this colony's sole jurisdiction, I write, in the name of the Government, to state the various functions of the commission.

tribunal would hold such an inquiry. The Board of Trade has for more than seventy years been divested of the power of dealing directly, and in a Court the first instance, with the certificates of masters, mates, and engineers. That is clear from the 23rd section of the Imperial statute, 25 and 26 Vic., cap. 63. The Board of Trade is purely and solely, in respect of all shipping casualties, a tribunal of confirmation and appeal, and the local maritime boards are by express enactment, constituted the Courts the first instance. It performs a function somewhat analogous to that performed by the Attorney-General in this colony in his office of Grand Jury, in respect of deposition taken by magistrates. It is not a superior Court relation to the Marine Board in the sense that can suspend or supersede the jurisdiction of that body. Neither (ex converso) is the Marine Board a subordinate Court, as you seem to think, in the sense that its jurisdiction is liable to be ousted by the Board of Trade. The thing only ousts the jurisdiction of our board, which is the occurrence of any of the circumstances specified in the provisions to the 3rd section of the Merchant Shipping Act, passed in England last year. And some of these, as was pointed out, has happened. The Turner-General was to step in at the earliest safe opportunity to come into view after an information himself sworn against the accused; or if he went to inquire into the case in the course of a coroner's inquest, and tell the Court to stop the examination of the witnesses, and suspend the proceedings further proceedings in the case, inasmuch as it was his intention to have the case initiated before a different Court, we should then have a much closer analogy to the action of the Board of Trade in the present instance than that which is suggested in your leading article. It might be that such an interference with the course of justice by him would permit of a fuller post-mortem examination, or a more complete analysis of a poison; but the Attorney-General would dream of such interference, and

The only possible excuse that could have been urged in favour of the action of the Board of Trade, namely, that the case of the builders of the Austral would be as powerfully represented in England than in this colony, is utterly demolished by a provision in the Merchant Shipping Act of last year, which makes all the cases of local marine boats subject not only to a re-hearing before the local board, but also to appeal before a genuine court of justice—the Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice.

If this provision against any possible injustice, or miscarriage of justice, an effective safeguard has been furnished, to all persons concerned in the sinking of the Austral. That Court of Appeal would, if the case had been allowed to go to a hearing before the Marine Board, also have had, in support of the finding of the local tribunal, all the evidence taken in the investigation. Now, the wreck crew, the master and the crew of the ship, the witnesses in England will have just as much as it suits the parties interested to furnish him with. Of course, he will have any quantity of scientific evidence about the ship, the centre of gravity; but the evidence of facts will be extremely meagre, for the witnesses will not be forthcoming.

The result of the inquiry, if there be any result, will be reassuring to nobody. The theories of the ship's builders will, of course, come out triumphant. The reason for the disaster will be divided between the captains and the engineers; and people will gradually come to the inevitable conclusion that "ships of the age" ought, in future, to be commanded by a staff of University professors rather than by practical seamen.

over Board of Trade certificates. It is also the first exhibition of reaction against the current and the spirit of imperial shipping legislation. Of course it is a deliberate traverse of the competency of our Marine Board, and a deliberate insult to the Imperial Parliament, which, by passing the Merchant Shipping Inquiries Act of 1892, confirmed and extended the jurisdiction of colonial Courts over Board of Trade certificates.
